

A LESSON W. JOE LOVANO

FROM DIGGING DEEPER VIDEO #164

"Play ahead of the changes." Every good movie director and novelist knows this. Don't just end things . . . create motion into the NEXT thing. Good conversations don't just grind to a halt every three minutes, either. They morph into the next topic. And so, great players (Joe Lovano and Bill Evans as outstanding examples) do this as well. They often play ahead of the chord changes.

The idea is to arrive on the next chord change EARLY, before the chord has arrived. In the best scenario, you will be playing a bunch of WRONG notes over the current chord. Good! That is what we want, tension created now, which is released a little bit later. It's just another way to create tension (ie. interest) that has a built in release to it.
