

SWING VS. BEBOP

FROM DIGGING DEEPER VIDEO #192

While the styles of swing music (think big bands and the 1930's) and bebop (think small group jazzs and the 1940's) certainly have a lot to do with each other, they were also very different. Some people talked about swing sounding more "romantic and lyrical," while bebop was perhaps more "gritty and urban." To a musician responsible for playing these styles however, we need something more actionable than just emotional descriptions.

It turns out that we have to play our instruments very differently to sound convincing as a swing player, versus a bebop player. There are mechanical things we need to be in control of, and one of the most important is articulation, how we end our phrases.

#1a - Melodic line in swing style

#1b - Melodic line in bebop style

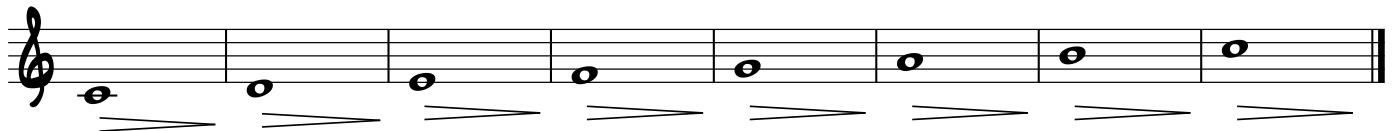

#2a - Melodic line in swing style

#2b - Melodic line in bebop style

#3 - Tapering longer notes (swing)

#4 - "Bebop" articulation

