

WORLD'S GREATEST LICK

FROM DIGGING DEEPER VIDEO #139

A combination of diatonic melodicism, chromatic hipness, and a classic bebop enclosure, this wonderful little melody has everything going for it. And where did this perfect gem come from? None other than Clifford Brown, from his fantastic recording of the song "Cherokee" off the album "Study In Brown." And yes, at mm = 350+.

In his solo on the song, Clifford plays this exact lick/melody a number of times, over a number of different chords. He also plays various fragments of the lick many more times. What does this tell us? It tells us that Clifford VALUED this lick. That he practiced it. That his fingers knew it well, and that his ears wanted to hear it. What better insight do we need into the mind of a jazz genius? NONE! Time to take this lesson with Clifford Brown to heart. Stand up, walk over to your instrument, and get to work.

#1 - The original version, played as a solo break

#2 - Displacing the lick to begin on beat 1

#3 - Putting the lick into 3/4
